RETURNED

Netherlands | English, Yakut

Director: Al Yene

Who controls what is remembered, and what is left unsaid? This short film explores the disrupted cultural memory of the Sakha people, whose oral traditions and historical narratives were confined to state-controlled archives through Russian colonization. Weaving together narrated memories, archival footage, and computer-generated imagery, the film meditates on the silences embedded in cultural consciousness—what has been lost, distorted, or remains unresolved.

PITOTEYIHTAM - THEY ARE SACRED

Canada | English, Cree w/ English subtitles

Director: Kim O'Bomsawin

Within Indigenous cultures, differences were not traditionally seen as a handicap, but rather as a strength that could benefit the entire community. Such is the case with autistic people, considered to have unique gifts and connections to the spirit world. While our people are currently reclaiming our traditional knowledge and philosophies, we are also facing a severe lack of resources adapted to our new reality.

THROUGH THESE EYES

Canada | English
Director: Charles Laird

An American elementary school program from the 1970s, Man: A Course of Study (MACOS), looked to the Inuit of the Canadian Arctic to help students see their own society in a new way. At its core was The Netsilik Film Series, an acclaimed benchmark of visual anthropology from the National Film Board that captured a year in the life of an Inuit family, reconstructing an ancient culture on the cusp of contact with the outside world. But the graphic images of the Netsilik people created a clash of values that tore rifts in communities across the U.S. and revealed a fragile relationship between politics and education. A fiery national debate ensued between academic and conservative forces.

Through These Eyes looks back at the high stakes of this controversial curriculum. Decades later, as American influence continues to affect cultures worldwide, the story of MACOS resonates strongly.
